LollaMac is a range of sterling silver and mixed metal jewellery, designed and handcrafted in Northumberland by Clare Edwin. After leaving a highly stressful career in teaching, Clare found creative escape attending a silversmithing night class where she discovered great satisfaction in turning an unassuming piece of metal into wearable art. From here she was motivated to set up her own jewellery making business, developing her practice further from books and the internet and a good amount of trial and error.

Much of Clare's inspiration comes from the natural world around her, its textures and colours lending themselves perfectly to the earthy metal tones which feature so heavily in her work. With its understated style and signature combinations of sterling silver, copper and brass, the LollaMac collection contains jewellery for any occasion and all ages.

After spending several years selling her work at craft fairs, Clare opened her own bricks and mortar shop in Hexham in 2024. Her open studio is set up behind the counter, allowing visitors to see how her work is made, as well as having a go themselves in her popular weekly workshops.

Clare lives in Hexham with her husband Paul and their adopted retired police dog Ivan, who has proved to be a very popular attraction with visitors to the shop.
